appause and fertile appreciation. Mr. Evans has hardly been equalied.

The Tribune of April 23.

The audience really seemed to be carried with the speaker in every selection, and the most cotinusastic and encouraging piantitis greeted his every effort. The sublime and the forensic, the pathetic and the latilicrous, were represented in Mr. Evans receroire.

The audience of the selection of this sayle, and his manner of realing "the Bells" was unique, giving in each stancathe scale of musical notes.

His voice is senorous, yet capable of a great variety of modulation; his countenance is manly and expressive; his action unusually bold and ease. In a programme that afforded opportunity for a wide range of dramatic effect, and which was therefore calculated to tax his power quite series of the programme of the series of the programme of the course, Mr. Evans acquitted himself as well on Friday night as to delight, and, we may add to surprise his hearers.
